

Know Your Numbers. Sell the Process, Not the Product.

Visual reference cards from the Monday 18 May session led by director Corie Dawson. Use alongside the Session 1–7 toolkits. Print, pin to your wall, or keep on your desk.

WHAT'S INSIDE

- 01 Know your numbers cold
If you can't recite the five prices, you can't sell the five products.
- 02 Sell the process, not the product
The website is just the finished bathroom. The process is what you sell.
- 03 Read the room before pitching
Match the tier to the situation, not to the template.
- 04 Handling the DIY objection
When they mention Squarespace, shift the question to their time, not the tool.
- 05 The double-whammy
Agree with the surface point. Undercut it. Elevate above the comparison.
- 06 Time travel — your objection database
Build a personal playbook of "if they say X, I say Y."
- 07 "Where do I need to be?"
The closing line that qualifies them in or out cleanly.
- 08 Price is a communication
Don't fear being expensive. Own the positioning.
- 09 Daily mindset card
Print and pin. Read every morning.

Know your numbers cold

If you can't recite the five prices, the page counts, and the inclusions — on the spot, no notes — you're not ready to pitch. The customer can tell.

THE PRINCIPLE

"There's a reason the guy didn't sign up. You didn't know your numbers. He could tell."

MINIMUM BAR BY FRIDAY

- ☐ Memorise the five price points to the dollar — including the standard discount.
- ☐ Memorise the page count and inclusions for each tier.
- ☐ Be able to explain why each price point is what it is, in one sentence.
- ☐ Map turnover bands to recommended tier — service AND trade business.
- ☐ Drill it with a colleague: they pick a tier at random, you describe it.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU DON'T KNOW

- You hesitate. The customer registers it as uncertainty about the offer.
- You pitch wide — either too high or too low — because you don't know where to land.
- Your authority is gone. Every subsequent claim sounds less believable.
- When they push back on price, you have no defensible answer ready.

DRILL THIS WEEK

Five products. Five prices. Pair up with a colleague each morning. They name a tier; you recite the price, pages, inclusions, ideal-fit customer in under 30 seconds.

Sell the process, not the product

Competitors can copy your visuals. Cheap platforms can produce decent end products. The differentiator is the process — and that's what reps should pitch.

PITCHING THE PRODUCT

loses every time

WHAT YOU SAY

"Here's how it looks. Here's the platform. Here's the design."

WHAT THEY HEAR

Same as everyone else. Just visual differences.

OBJECTION YOU INVITE

"My mate can do this on Squarespace for $2,000."

YOUR DEFENCE

None — a DIY platform CAN produce something visually fine.

PITCHING THE PROCESS

wins consistently

WHAT YOU SAY

"Here's how we build it. Here's how little you do."

WHAT THEY HEAR

Real workflow. Real support. Time saved.

OBJECTION YOU DISARM

"My mate's cheaper" → "But you have to do everything yourself."

YOUR EDGE

The process is unique to us. Can't be copied or undercut.

THE FIVE-STEP PROCESS — WALK EVERY PROSPECT THROUGH THIS

1. DISCOVERY CALL with the project lead — pre-built question set.
2. HANDOVER MEETING with the strategist — fully prepped, straight into build.
3. VISUAL STYLING pick from a stamped pitch — like choosing finishes for a renovation.
4. BUILD PHASE we do the work; you receive staged previews.
5. LAUNCH + HANDOVER hosting, training, and post-launch support.

DRILL THIS WEEK

Be able to walk a prospect through the five-step process in 90 seconds without notes. The process IS what you sell.

Read the room before pitching high

“Always pitch high” is a rule of thumb, not a script. Pitch high to growing prospects. Pitch as maintenance to stable ones. Read the room first.

FOUR SIGNALS TO READ IN THE FIRST FIVE MINUTES

TURNOVER	What does the affordability math say they can comfortably spend?
BOOK POSITION	Hungry for leads (light book) or maxed out (booked 9+ months)?
STATED INTENT	Scaling up, holding steady, or winding down?
VISIBLE SIGNALS	No website ever → ready to start. Spent before → calibrated expectations.

THE COTTON-WOOL POSITIONING PLAY

Instead of leading with the top tier (and retreating), show two adjacent tiers, form a soft opinion, leave room to move both ways.

“I’ve got two I think suit you — silver at $X and gold at $Y. I don’t think we need to look at diamond, that’s overkill. Between these two, I’m leaning toward gold because of the projects page — but have a look and tell me what you think.”

You’ve formed an opinion (conviction). You’ve left room either way (cotton wool). The prospect feels guided, not pushed.

THE TRAP

Pitching the top tier when the room says “maintenance” produces sharp retreat — the customer drags you to silver and you look like a panicked discounter. Read first.

Handling the DIY / cheaper-platform objection

When they mention Squarespace, Wix, or “my mate can do it cheaper,” don’t panic-defend features. Shift the question from tool to time.

WHAT NOT TO DO

“Ours is better quality. Ours uses industry-standard WordPress. Ours has more features.”

Why it fails: you’re defending FEATURES — exactly what Squarespace also has. A DIY platform CAN produce something visually fine. You can’t win the feature comparison.

THE REFRAME

“Squarespace is a great DIY platform — if you want to build it yourself, you can. That’s why it’s cheap. The work doesn’t vanish on a cheap platform. It moves to YOU. You’re booked out six months — do you actually have time to write the content, sort the images, set up SEO, manage hosting?”

Why it works: you agree with the truth (DIY is cheap). You shift the question from tool to time. You leverage what you already know about them (busy). You make the cheap option visible as work they’d have to do — which is the part they were hoping to avoid.

BONUS LINE FOR “MY MATE CAN DO IT”

“Honestly — most of our clients come from rebuilds. They went cheap first. The website they’re paying us to fix is the second one they’ve paid for. We’re not the cheapest. But we’re usually the last one you’ll need.”

THE PRINCIPLE

Never compete on the platform. Compete on the experience of being built. The platform is irrelevant if the work falls on the customer.

The double-whammy

When a prospect raises a competitor's advantage, agree with the surface point AND undercut it in one move. You appear fair. The comparison dies.

WHY IT LANDS

- You're not arguing with the prospect — you're agreeing with their observations. Trust intact.
- You've made the competitor's strengths irrelevant ("neither is your problem").
- You've elevated above the comparison entirely ("the real problem is somewhere else").
- Asymmetric: whatever competitor point they raise, the same three-step structure works.

QUOTE

"I'm not putting it down. I'm saying yeah, I recognise you, I'm meeting you here — then whammy, that's not even your real problem."

“Where do I need to be?”

The closing line for wobbly-but-engaged prospects. Direct, asymmetric, and qualifies them in or out cleanly.

THE FULL LINE

“I want your business. Realistically — where do I need to be? You know I can’t get to $2,000. But where do we need to be? Be straight — I can only say no if it’s outlandish, and that’ll be the end of it. So tell me what you actually want from me.”

WHAT EACH PHRASE IS DOING

“I want your business”

Direct, clean, no apologies. Most reps never actually say this.

“Realistically”

Pre-empts time-wasting. Signals no fantasy numbers welcome.

“You know I can’t get to $2,000”

Rules out the bottom without you having to argue it.

“Outlandish, and that’ll be the end of it”

Gives you the right to walk. They qualify themselves in or out.

“What do you want from me?”

Transfers responsibility for the next move to them.

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT

Three possible responses. Reasonable number → close. Outlandish number → graceful walk. “I’ll think about it” → they were never buying. All three are qualifications. None waste your time.

Price is a communication — own where you sit

Cheap competitors aren't a threat. They're the contrast that makes our positioning visible.

THE PARABLE

Singapore Airlines: $400. VietJet: $200. Even with $200 on the table, most travellers pick Singapore. Why? The price difference IS the message. Cheap signals risk. Expensive signals safety. The premium IS the promise.

$2,000 WEBSITE

what it signals

- Cheap platform. DIY build.
- No real support after launch.
- Customer does the content work.
- Likely first of two websites — the rebuild is coming.
- Risk: it works for 6 months, then breaks.

OUR WEBSITE

what it signals

- Professional process. Industry-standard build.
- Ongoing support and hosting.
- We do the work — you give the brief.
- Built to last — the only one you'll need.
- Confidence: it works. It keeps working.

THE PRO RESPONSE

When they mention a $2,000 competitor, don't defend the price. Elevate the positioning: "That's exactly why we exist. We're the people you call after the $2,000 website didn't deliver."

TODAY'S TEST

Can I recite my numbers cold?

NUMBERS

Memorise five prices, page counts, inclusions. No notes. No hesitation.

PROCESS

Pitch the build experience, not the website. The process is the differentiator.

READ

Turnover, book position, intent, visible signals. Match the tier to the situation.

DOUBLE-WHAMMY

Agree with their surface point. Undercut its importance. Elevate above it.

WHERE

Wobbly prospect: "I want your business. Realistically — where do I need to be?"

Know your numbers. Sell the process. The rest takes care of itself.
