

Close the Exits. Hold the Line. Win the Deal.

The pitch is a babysitter watching a restless child. Every objection is an exit. Close them in sequence — don't chase. Let the buyer come to you.

WHAT'S INSIDE

- 01 Read the buying signal
A laugh at the price is interest, not rejection.
- 02 The alligator farm
Close every exit before the buyer finds one.
- 03 Dog and the car
Chase loses. Walk away wins.
- 04 Acknowledge the number
Take their target literally. Watch them break character.
- 05 The $700 lesson
Buyers pay extra to feel like they won.
- 06 Honesty · integrity · loyalty
The three pillars under every technique.
- 07 Daily reference card
Print and pin. Read before every pitch.

Read the buying signal.

When the buyer laughs at the price, they're showing interest — not walking away. The drop is the trap.

THE TRAP · POT SHOTS

Rep pitches gold. Buyer laughs. Rep drops to silver. Buyer pushes. Rep drops to bronze. Three prices in 30 seconds. Credibility gone.

WHAT THE BUYER LEARNS:

- The first price was inflated.
- Any number the rep says is movable.
- The deal is about how low they can push, not what's being sold.
- The rep doesn't believe in the value.

THE READ · HOLD

Buyer laughs. Rep holds the price, calmly. Asks two confirmation questions: Do you like the process? Do you like the company?

WHAT THE BUYER LEARNS:

- The rep means the price.
- The work is worth what it costs.
- Negotiation hasn't even started yet — alignment first.
- This is a professional, not a discount machine.

THE RULE

When the price gets laughed at, don't drop. Confirm alignment first — get two yeses on process and company before you touch the number.

The alligator farm.

Every objection is an exit. Close them in sequence — before the buyer finds one.

ALLIGATORS WAITING

(deal dies the moment the child gets out)

CLOSE THE EXITS IN SEQUENCE

01 Process

"Do you like the process? Does it work for your business?" Wait for yes.

02 Company

"Do you like our company? Does it align with your values?" Wait for yes.

03 Expectation

"Can you help me — what were you expecting to pay?" Then acknowledge it literally.

Dog and the car.

Chasing the buyer makes the chase a game. Walking away pulls them in.

THE PRINCIPLE

Sales is push and pull. Know when to let the rope go. Buyers pull toward what isn't being forced on them.

Acknowledge the number literally.

Take their stated target at face value. Tell them you can't get there. Then offer the path back.

01BUYER STATES TARGET

"I was hoping for $3,000 to $4,000."

02REP ACKNOWLEDGES LITERALLY

"I hear you — that's where you want to be. I can't get there. The work doesn't shrink to that number."

03REP HOLDS THE VALUE

"Here's what I recommend: silver, at $6,300. That's not your number, but that's what the work costs."

04REP OFFERS THE PATH BACK

"If you bring your hosting to us, there's a 25% discount on the project — brings it to $4,700."

05REP STEPS BACK

"That's still not where you wanted to be, but it's the closest I can get. I'll send the proposal — call you Monday."

WHY THIS WORKS

Buyers who quote a low number are testing. Taking the number seriously forces them to either back it up — or quietly stretch when the rep doesn't fold.

The $700 lesson.

Buyers pay extra to feel like they won. The win is what closes the deal — not the price.

WHY THE BUYER PAYS THE EXTRA $700

01 The stated number is a position, not a ceiling.

Buyers throw out low targets to test the seller. Their real maximum is whatever they'll pay if they feel they won.

02 Visible struggle signals the buyer pushed hard.

If the seller agrees easily, the buyer suspects more room exists. The visible work proves the offer is at the limit.

03 Above-the-target settles produce the strongest sense of victory.

$22,700 says: "you pushed me past where I said I'd go." That's the feeling the buyer's actually buying.

04 Never close the small gap by asking the buyer to come up.

The buyer has to close it themselves — that's how they keep the win. "Can you stretch $700?" kills the deal.

Honesty. Integrity. Loyalty.

Three pillars under every technique. The values are what make the techniques work — without them, the techniques read as manipulation.

HONESTY

Tell the buyer the truth about whether you're the right fit.

- Decline deals you know will go badly.
- Be honest about what the work actually costs.
- Don't promise outcomes you can't deliver.
- Tell the buyer when their target is unrealistic.
- The reps who do this build the longest pipelines.

INTEGRITY

Stand behind your value. Hold the price the work deserves.

- Don't fold the price beyond what the work is worth.
- Don't pretend you have a secret discount you don't.
- Don't accept a deal that loses money to win short term.
- When you say "this is the price," mean it.
- Buyers can feel the integrity in the room.

LOYALTY

Recommend the right product for the buyer, not the most profitable one.

- Match the package to what they actually need.
- Refer them elsewhere if you're not the fit.
- Loyalty to the buyer compounds back into loyalty from them.
- Long-term clients come from short-term loyalty moves.
- The agency's reputation is built one loyalty call at a time.

WHAT THE BUYER ACTUALLY READS

People aren't interested in what you say — they're interested in what you do. Show the three pillars every place, everywhere, every time.

Daily reference card.

Print and pin. Read before every pitch.

DO · EVERY PITCH

- Confirm process and company alignment first.
- Hold the price when the buyer laughs.
- Acknowledge the target literally.
- Offer the discount path, not a price drop.
- Walk away energy when the buyer pushes.
- Use "I understand" before every objection.
- Send the proposal at your price, not theirs.
- Let the buyer close the last $700 themselves.
- Lead with honesty, integrity, loyalty.

DON'T · EVER

- Don't fire a second price after the first is rejected.
- Don't chase the buyer to lower numbers.
- Don't apologise for the price.
- Don't close the small gap by asking them to stretch.
- Don't drop the work value to fit their target.
- Don't show commission urgency.
- Don't argue with rude buyers — disengage calmly.
- Don't take a deal you know will go badly.
- Don't promise outcomes you can't deliver.

WATCH-OUTS

- Pot-shooting prices in the same call.
- Forgetting to confirm alignment before pricing.
- Chasing the buyer to whichever exit they ran for.
- Salivating energy when a deal is close.
- Treating a low target as a real ceiling.
- Pushing the buyer the last bit yourself.
- Reading "I'm not sure" as a no instead of a not-yet.
- Letting the buyer's rudeness rattle the next call.
- Running techniques without the values underneath.

THE ONE-LINER

Close the exits. Hold the line. Let them come to you — and let them feel like they won.
