The metric shift.

From bookings → to deals. The headline number changes. The behaviour changes with it.

OLD · BOOKINGS METRIC

- Win = bookings that attend
- Reps over-qualify volume, under-qualify intent
- Bookings without close potential pass through
- Lead-gen and closers measured separately
- Easy to game — book anything, hope it shows

NEW · DEALS METRIC

- Win = deals that close
- Reps qualify hard — quality over volume
- Bookings handed over are closer-ready
- Lead-gen and closers aligned on outcome
- Hard to game — closing is real work

THE PRINCIPLE

Pay for the outcome you actually want. Bookings are the path — deals are the destination. The headline number sets the team's behaviour.

The safety net.

Keep the booking bonus — not for the veterans. For the next ten hires.

WHY IT STAYS

Veterans would happily lose the booking bonus for a bigger deal bonus. New hires need wins on day one — before they've learned to close. The booking bonus is the bridge.

WHAT IT EARNS

01 Day-one wins for new starters

New reps make money inside their first week, before they've made a single sale. The bonus is the proof of progress.

02 Sharper recruitment conversations

"Base + per-booking + per-deal" sells better than "base + per-deal only." Three layers feel structured; one layer feels risky.

03 A soft landing for veterans on rough weeks

Bonus is the floor under a quiet week. The veteran always has something to point at — keeps morale stable.

04 Easier to remove later than add later

Start with it, let reps opt out as they mature. Adding it later signals weakness; starting with it signals investment.

The wheel.

Variable reinforcement. Six reward types. Earn the spin — find out what you've won.

REWARD TYPES

- FOOD
Team lunch / dinner
- EXPERIENCE
Gold class / escape room
- CASH
Direct deposit
- MYSTERY
Sealed envelope
- WILD CARD
Double commission
- BOOBY TRAP
Pack of lollies

WHY VARIABLE REWARDS BEAT PREDICTABLE ONES

The brain treats a known $100 bonus differently from a chance at six different outcomes. Uncertainty is what makes the engagement sticky.

The booby trap — why the lows matter.

A small share of the wheel is a deliberately low reward. Without the downside, the upside fades.

THE PRINCIPLE

Predictable upside fades. The brain adapts. Variable upside — with the possibility of landing on something small — keeps the dopamine system engaged.

HOW IT WORKS

01 The upside needs contrast

A wheel with only high-value rewards normalises the highs. The brain stops feeling them as wins.

02 The low has to be light, not heavy

A pack of lollies is the right calibration — small enough to feel like a loss, light enough that nobody resents it.

03 The booby trap resets the ego

A rep who landed on the low last week works harder this week. The contrast becomes motivation.

04 Never punish — just under-reward

The booby trap is novelty, not penalty. It preserves the relationship with the team. Punishment damages it.

Earning the spin.

Two qualifying paths. One individual. One team. Different incentives for different behaviours.

INDIVIDUAL SPIN

Three consecutive closed deals — back to back. Individual rep, individual win.

WHAT IT REWARDS:

- Hot streaks — back-to-back closes
- Hard qualification of bookings
- Discipline through a sequence
- Strong week of individual focus

TEAM SPIN

Ten closed deals across the team in one week. Lead-gen and closers win together.

WHAT IT REWARDS:

- Sustained team output
- Lead-gen handing over quality bookings
- Closers converting at a fair rate
- Pair behaviour that benefits both teams

WHY TWO PATHS

The individual spin rewards focused weeks. The team spin rewards behaviour that benefits both teams. Different geometries for different outcomes.

The recruitment pitch.

The competition is a recruitment asset. Reps should be able to explain it concretely outside the office.

THE OPENING LINE

"You make money from day one — base wage, plus a bonus on every booking that attends, plus a bigger bonus on every deal that closes."

TALKING POINTS FOR THE RECRUITMENT CONVERSATION

01 Three layers of income

Base wage + per-booking bonus + per-deal bonus. From day one. Not after a 90-day probation.

02 The safety net for learning

The booking bonus means you make money while you're learning to close. You're paid for progress, not just outcomes.

03 The deal bonus scales with the deal

Big deals pay big bonuses. The structure rewards quality, not just volume.

04 The wheel — and the team wins

Hot streak = spin. Team hits ten = team spin. The wheel pays cash, prizes, experiences, or extra commission.

Weekly reference card.

Print and pin. Read at the start of every week.

DO · EVERY WEEK

- Chase deals — bookings are the path.
- Qualify every booking hard.
- Track your three-deal streak.
- Know the top numbers off the top of your head.
- Talk about the bonus structure in recruitment chats.
- Hand over closer-ready bookings to the closing team.
- Pair behaviour — help your partner hit the team spin.
- Use the booking bonus as your first-week safety net (if new).

DON'T · EVER

- Don't book volume without intent.
- Don't celebrate a booking that won't close.
- Don't compete individually if the team spin is in reach.
- Don't make the recruitment pitch sound like a script.
- Don't resent the booby trap — that's the point.
- Don't expect to earn the spin without effort.
- Don't drop the booking bonus until you've graduated.
- Don't fall back into bookings-as-the-metric thinking.

WATCH-OUTS

- Reps treating the safety net as the win condition.
- Streaks broken by one unqualified booking in the middle.
- Lead-gen and closers blaming each other for misses.
- Wheel rewards that feel boring after a month — refresh them.
- Top numbers no one knows or tracks.
- Recruitment pitches that lead with cold-calling, not bonuses.
- Veterans who never opt out of the booking bonus.
- Booby trap reaction that becomes resentment, not novelty.

THE ONE-LINER

Shift to deals. Keep the safety net. Spin the wheel. Build for the next ten hires.
